JCI Movement

Today's Outlook:

- On Friday (27/10/23) trading, the Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 1% and the Nasdaq rose 0.4%. While the S&P 500 fell 0.4%. Amazon rose more than 6% after the tech giant reported third-quarter results that topped Wall Street estimates. Intel Corporation, meanwhile, jumped more than 9% as the chipmaker's blowout Q3 earnings and lift on earnings guidance drew praise from Wall Street.
- The core price consumer expenditure index, a measure of inflation closely watched by the Fed, slowed to 3.7% in the 12 months through September, as expected, from a 3.9% pace the prior month. While ongoing signs of the slowing inflation will provide the Fed with further evidence that its restrictive monetary policy measures are having the desired impact, the stronger-than-expected pace of consumer spending seen last month could muddy the Fed's thinking on policy.
- At a speech at Economic Club of New York luncheon on Oct. 19, Powell warned that above-trend economic growth could "put the progress of inflation at risk and justify further tightening of monetary policy," the Fed chief said.
- NHKSI RESEARCH considers last week's JCI Closing position which rebounded right at an important medium-term support as an attempt to reduce further decline even though its status is still relatively speculative. Investors/traders are advised not to buy too much, although the current position must be recognized as attractive for bottom fishing.

Trade Minister Zulhas Discusses Industrial Downstreaming Issue at G7 Meeting

Minister of Trade Zulkifli Hasan (Zulhas) stated that industrial downstream is an aspect needed by developing countries to make an economic leap. Downstreaming is also considered a move for a more resilient global supply chain. In the past three years, Zulhas said, supply bottlenecks and shortages have shown vulnerabilities in the supply chain management system. Moreover, the current condition is coupled with massive geopolitical conflicts that increase the phenomenon of trade fragmentation and acts of unilateralism. "I am convinced that allowing trade fragmentation to become a broader policy will lead to detrimental and ineffective trade setbacks," he said. Therefore, Zulhas emphasized to the G7 countries that building supply chains is an inclusive endeavor. The involvement of the public and private sectors, as well as international organizations in innovation and collaboration is key. (Bisnis)

Joe Biden and Xi Jinping Scheduled to Meet Next Month, Improving Relations?

US President Joe Biden is expected to meet with Chinese President Xi Jinping next month following a visit by Chinese diplomats to the White House. The two leaders, who have not met since attending the G20 Summit in Bali last year, are likely to meet at the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) Economic Summit in San Francisco in November 2023. Currently, the White House has not confirmed a meeting between Biden and Xi, but it is rumored that in a meeting on Friday (27/10), Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi and US security adviser Jake Sullivan said the two sides were "working together toward a meeting". On the other hand, China's foreign ministry in Beijing did not immediately confirm the visit but said that there were discussions about the often tense relationship between the two countries. According to Xinhua, the Chinese state media said Wang told Biden that China is determined to improve and stabilize its relations with the US through the three principles of "mutual respect, peaceful coexistence, and win-win cooperation".
